Children usually inherit rights or assets from their parents. However, some parents have children who are not their biological children. In these cases, the parents may want to ensure that their children are able to inherit their assets. This is often done through a will. However, some parents may want to ensure that their children are able to inherit their assets even if they are not their biological children. This is often done through a trust. A trust is a legal arrangement that allows a person to transfer assets to a trust, which is then managed by a trustee for the benefit of the trust's beneficiaries. This can be a useful way to ensure that assets are passed on to the right people, even if the person who created the trust is no longer alive.
